

Country Briefing - United States of America

Political Briefing

Introduction

The United States is a major strategic power in the Pacific given its extensive military presence, economic investments, and diplomatic commitments. While it does not explicitly recognize Taiwanese independence, we implicitly do. The US must continue to oppose Chinese attempts to seize Taiwan and ensure that Taiwan remains a free and democratic nation. China cannot be allowed to dictate the politics of Taiwan.

Strategic Objectives

The United States seeks to maintain its strategic ambiguity policy in order to provide a pathway to de-escalation for the PRC. As per the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979, the United States has not formally recognized Taiwan as an independent state and acknowledges that the Chinese claim the island based on the One China Act (but the US does not recognize the claim itself). This avoids forcing China past a stated red line of all-out war (or indefinite prolongation of the war) due to an explicit recognition of Taiwan.

Country Briefing - United States of America

Political Briefing

Introduction

The United States is a major strategic power in the Pacific given its extensive military presence, economic investments, and diplomatic commitments. While it does not explicitly recognize Taiwanese independence, we implicitly do. The US must continue to oppose Chinese attempts to seize Taiwan and ensure that Taiwan remains a free and democratic nation. China cannot be allowed to dictate the politics of Taiwan.

Strategic Objectives

The United States seeks to maintain its strategic ambiguity policy in order to provide a pathway to de-escalation for the PRC. As per the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979, the United States has not formally recognized Taiwan as an independent state and acknowledges that the Chinese claim the island based on the One China Act (but the US does not recognize the claim itself). This avoids forcing China past a stated red line of all-out war (or indefinite prolongation of the war) due to an explicit recognition of Taiwan.

Country Briefing - United States of America

Political Briefing

Introduction

The United States is a major strategic power in the Pacific given its extensive military presence, economic investments, and diplomatic commitments. While it does not explicitly recognize Taiwanese independence, we implicitly do. The US must continue to oppose Chinese attempts to seize Taiwan and ensure that Taiwan remains a free and democratic nation. China cannot be allowed to dictate the politics of Taiwan.

Strategic Objectives

The United States seeks to maintain its strategic ambiguity policy in order to provide a pathway to de-escalation for the PRC. As per the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979, the United States has not formally recognized Taiwan as an independent state and acknowledges that the Chinese claim the island based on the One China Act (but the US does not recognize the claim itself). This avoids forcing China past a stated red line of all-out war (or indefinite prolongation of the war) due to an explicit recognition of Taiwan.

Country Briefing - United States of America

Political Briefing

Introduction

The United States is a major strategic power in the Pacific given its extensive military presence, economic investments, and diplomatic commitments. While it does not explicitly recognize Taiwanese independence, we implicitly do. The US must continue to oppose Chinese attempts to seize Taiwan and ensure that Taiwan remains a free and democratic nation. China cannot be allowed to dictate the politics of Taiwan.

Strategic Objectives

The United States seeks to maintain its strategic ambiguity policy in order to provide a pathway to de-escalation for the PRC. As per the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979, the United States has not formally recognized Taiwan as an independent state and acknowledges that the Chinese claim the island based on the One China Act (but the US does not recognize the claim itself). This avoids forcing China past a stated red line of all-out war (or indefinite prolongation of the war) due to an explicit recognition of Taiwan.

